Local startup brings clean water to 10,000 homes

A team of engineers has designed a low-cost filter that is already running in three rural towns.

When the first prototype was installed last spring, the town had been boiling its water for years. Six months later, the filter serves 10,000 homes and the team is training local technicians to keep it running.

Great news for the rural towns. Do you know if the filters will reach the north of the region too?

Ada Lovelace Oct 2, 2026 · 10:05
The low-cost design is the key part. I would love a follow-up on how the prototype was tested.

Thanks! The team plans to reach the north next spring, and I will cover it.

After a two-month pilot, the central library will stay open around the clock during the exam season.

Students asked for a quiet place to study at night. The pilot showed that more than 300 people used the reading rooms between midnight and six in the morning.
